Says Anti-Zionists Will Not Hinder State

The "nationalist philosophy" of Zionist Jews is a death fixation, an abnormality, even though it can be understood and explained by the tragedies of Jewish life", Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, professor at Rollins College, Winter Park, Florida, told the American Council of Judaism, at San Francisco, Cal.

"It is a new role for the Jew, who has ever been concerned with the good of humanity and contributed to the enrichment of science, art, literature and social gain wherever he lived, to be suddenly preoccupied with his own survival," said the rabbi emeritus of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. "The normal mind lives without fear of death. It is the sick mind which broods upon the fear of not surviving."

Pledging that "those of us who did not favor the establishment of the Jewish state will certainly do nothing to hinder it," Rabbi Lazaron asked:

"What is a normal Jewish life? Is it to fill the child with an ever present consciousness of being different from his fellow-Americans, with an unhappy belief that he will always feel the stings of anti-Semitism, that there is nothing he can do about it but flee it or fight it? I do not believe that the Jew is unable to live a normal life outside Palestine. I do not believe that anti-Semitism is an incurable disease. Jewish nationalism holds no hope for the liberal and democratic forces in the world."

Cautions Jews To Avoid Nationalism

The State of Israel can become "a true bastion of Western civilization" only if it manages to avoid the "nationalist impulses" that have marred the history of Europe in the last two centuries, Sir Norman Angell, British author and Nobel Peace Prize Winner in 1933, declared at the monthly luncheon club of the anti-Zionist New York Chapter of the American Council for Judaism, held at the Town Hall Club, 123 West Forty-third Street.

He told the seventy-five guests that for twenty-five years he had been an ardent Zionist, but hoped Israel would "avoid those errors into which nearly every nationality has at times fallen."

"We should examine what the position of Jews within the Western nations should now be," he went on. "Are they to form a series of national groups, a nationality within nationalities, with their emotions so involved in the future and fate of the new state that its needs or assumed needs will take precedence in their minds over the needs of Western unity as a whole?

"We know of course, that this has happened already in the case of a few who have, for example, repudiated completely the need of Anglo-American cooperation. Yet it is quite obvious that if Anglo-American cooperation is ended, all hope of unity for the West goes glimmering."

Was A Founder Of H.I.A.S. Council Of 4,500 Groups

Abraham Baron, executive secretary of the Council of Organizations of the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, died of a heart ailment in his home at 1292 St. John's Place, Brooklyn, N.Y. His age was 68. In 1929 Mr. Baron, with Louis Gallack and a group of other leaders, organized the HIAS Council of Organizations, which grew to a membership of almost 4,500 fraternal, labor and religious organizations in Greater New York.

With his wife, Mrs. Lena Kaplan Baron, he established the HIAS Ladies League with the following chapters: Manhattan, West Bronx, East Bronx, Borough Park, Crown Heights, Bensonhurst, Williamsburgh, East New York, Brighton Beach, Central Park West in this city and Paterson, Passaic and Newark, N.J.

Mr. Baron came to the United States from a small village near Riga, Latvia, in 1906. Two years later he organized the Bakers Union Local 100, first such local in New York's lower East Side.

During the next twenty-three years he served in various posts with business manager and organizer for the Bakers Union, served as a delegate to United Hebrew Trades for several years, and was active in the National Labor Committee for Palestine and the Workmen's Circle.

Mr. Baron made his headquarters in the HIAS offices at 425 Lafayette Street for the last fifteen years. Recently he had completed arrangements for the HIAS Council's twentieth jubilee convention which was in the Commodore Hotel, at which he was to present a report on the council's activities during the last year.

Surviving, besides his widow, are four sisters, Mrs. Bessie Steinfeld, Mrs. Lilly Mastin, Miss Ethel Baron and Miss Edith Baron.

Surgeon Makes Gift To Erect Reform Centre

Plans for construction of a national center for Reform Judaism in New York moved another step forward with the announcement that Dr. Albert A. Berg had made a large gift to finance the project. The new building will house the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the central body representing 400 congregations in America and Canada.

The amount of the gift from Dr. Berg, surgeon, literary collector and philanthropist, was not disclosed. However, Dr. Maurice N. Eisendrath, president of the union, said it was "the largest single contribution to any Jewish religious body in our generation." No site for the structure is definitely selected, it was reported, but a decision was said to be imminent.

In tribute to the parents of Dr. Berg the new centre will be known as the Morits and Josephine Berg Memorial House of Living Judaism.

A former president of the International College of Surgeons, Dr. Berg was a pioneer in the field of abdominal surgery. He is now consulting surgeon at Mount Sinai Hospital and director of surgery for Beth Moses Hospital in Brooklyn and Montefiore Hospital in the Bronx.

In addition to his long career in medicine, the 77-year-old surgeon has achieved recognition as one of the leading collectors of rare books and manuscripts. In 1940, he presented 3,000 items to the New York Public Library as a memorial to his brother, Dr. Henry W. Berg, who died in 1938, and he has since made a number of other gifts worth several million dollars to the library.

Early this year, Dr. Berg presented an undisclosed sum to Mount Sinai Hospital to finance construction of a new research building. This, too, was done in memory of Dr. Henry W. Berg.

The new religious center in New York will be the headquarters of several affiliates of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations as well as of the parent body. Among the affiliates are the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods and the National Federation of Temple Youth.

Although architects' drawings for the new structure have not been completed, present plans allow substantial space for a chapel and for permanent display of religious and ceremonial objects.

The first step toward the new building was taken last year when the union's biennial assembly voted to authorize establishment of headquarters in New York. Since its founding more than seventy-five years ago, the union has conducted its activities from Cincinnati.

Terms U.N. Action Unworkable

Senator Herbert H. Lehman, Democrat, of New York, strongly criticized the decision by the United Nations to internationalize Jerusalem. He termed the United Nations action "unjust and unworkable" and called for correction of this "grievous mistake".

The Senator took this stand at a ceremony at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, where Moshe Sharett, Israel's Foreign Minister, received an honorary degree of Doctor of Hebrew Letters.

Mr. Lehman's attack on the United Nations was his first public statement on foreign affairs since his election to the Senate last month. During his campaign for that office the subject of the control of Jerusalem had been avoided, observes the New York Times.

Mr. Sharett said he hoped Jerusalem would "in our times" become the capital of the State of Israel. Israel's Foreign Minister made his references to Jerusalem after he had received a blue and white hood from Dr. Louis Finkelstein, president of the seminary. Mr. Sharett said:

"I am certain that all eyes are now focused on Jerusalem and we pray that our state will fulfill its great mission; that she will achieve a life of peace and security, and will, in turn, secure the peace of the holy places of all that are contained within her walls and shall be established in our times as the capital of the State of Israel and the spiritual center of the Jewish people".

W.J.C. Calls On U.S. To Reject Pardon Of Nazis

The World Jewish Congress has called upon U.S. High Commissioner John J. McCloy to firmly reject any demands by the Bonn government for the freeing of German war criminals, it was announced by Dr. Robert S. Marcus, WJC Political Director. The WJC action came after recent press dispatches disclosed that Dr. Thomas Dehler, Minister of Justice in the Western German government, would ask for a general pardon for German war criminals now serving sentences in the U.S. war crimes prison at Landsberg. Dehler was quoted as saying that such sentences would probably not be passed now since "things are regarded more dispassionately today".

"The people of a score of nations who suffered from the ruthless policies of the Hitler regime cannot remain 'dispassionate' at the thought of freeing the criminals who are serving prison terms for some of the most revolting crimes ever perpetrated", Dr. Marcus declared. Recognising that McCloy only recently had taken over his post in the American zone, Dr. Marcus' letter to the High Commissioner was accompanied by a document just published by the World Jewish Congress which presents the harrowing record of a typical group of war criminals who would be freed if the German request for a blanket amnesty were granted. The document, titled "Operation Murder," is the first pamphlet in a series called, appropriately enough, "Lest We Forget", published by the Institute of Jewish Affairs of the World Jewish Congress.

"Operation Murder" deals with the trial of 22 members of the Einsatzgruppen, the special task forces set up in 1941 by order of Heinrich Himmler to accompany the Nazi invading armies in the East and to take charge of exterminating "racial inferiors" and "undesirable elements". The trial, known as Case No. 9, opened on December 15, 1947, in Nuremburg, before a U.S. Military Tribunal. The defendants were charged with organizing the murder of more than a million defenseless civilians, including hundreds of thousands of Jews of all ages and conditions —from babes in arms to the aged and infirm. One of the defendants, Otto Ohlendorf, a lawer and educator who commanded Einsatzgruppe D, was by his own testimony responsible for the murder of 90,000 persons.

The introductory chapter of "Operation Murder" points out that "this was not a crime of passion — unless it was a passionate desire to excel in homicide — but deliberate, carefully planned, cold-blooded murder, carried out, in the words of the indictment, 'as part of a systematic program of genocide, aimed at the destruction of foreign nations and ethnic groups by murderous extermination.' "Nor were the defendants underworld characters", the chapter continues, "but men of considerable education. Among them were lawyers, sociologists, economists, college professors and deans, an assessor, an architect, an opera singer and even a clergyman".

As the Chief U.S. Prosecutor, Brig. Gen. Telford Taylor, declared these men are guilty of "more than murder, for we cannot shut our eyes to a fact ominous and full of foreboding for all mankind. Not since men abandoned tribal loyalties has any state challenged the right of whole peoples to exist. And not since medieval times have governments marked men for death because of race or faith. Now comes this recrudescence — this Nazi doctrine of the master race— an arrogance blended from tribal conceit and a boundless contempt for man himself. It is an idea whose toleration endangers all men. It is, as we have charged, a Crime against Humanity".

The U.S. Military Tribunal declared that the crimes of the Einsatzgruppen "defy language in the depth and vastness of their brutality" and sentenced 14 of the defendants to death by hanging, two to life imprisonment and three to 20 years imprisonment. One was acquitted because he was not involved in the atrocities.

"I repeat," said Dr. Marcus, "that we cannot be 'dispassionate' when we hear official voices of the 'new' Germany call for the release of the vilest unhanged criminals the world has ever known. Certainly, the people of the world would be stricken with cynicism and fear if such criminals should be turned loose to become heroes of the unre-

Ask New American D.P. Law As Essential To Problem

The fourteen investigations that displaced persons undergo to establish their fitness for the American way of life were cited in New York as evidence of the careful selection and screening that DP's undergo before leaving Europe.

Leading representatives of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish groups sponsoring a broader Displaced Persons Act spoke out against those who have "maligned" the homeless seeking a haven in the U.S. They pictured the average DP as the most widely screened individual in the world and "a pretty tired and tardy DP" besides.

Conferring at the Empire State Building, the inter-faith officials joined in a reaffirmation of hope in DP activities and called for enactment of new legislation ameading the DP Act of 1948. They made clear their interest in the House bill that was recommitted by the Senate, 36-30, just prior to adjournment of the first session of the Eighty-first Congress. Dr. Walter Van Kirk of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, presiding observed that the Senate was under instructions to report a DP bill by January 25.

The conference's statement said: "We are deeply grateful for the opportunity we have had so far to sponsor displaced persons in America and earnestly hope to continue our interfaith activities. However, we believe that new legislation amending the DP Act of 1948—increasing the number of DP's eligible for admission, extending the life of the present law to 1951 and removing the provisions which make the present act inequitable and difficult to administer—is essential to the satisfactory solution of the DP problem."

Chances were held to be improved for more satisfactory DP legislation next month. An informal poll of Senators who were absent on [illegible] that a clear majority favored more liberalized provisions.

Paul J. MacCormack, executive assistant of the resettlement division, war relief services, National Catholic Welfare Council, ridiculed "reports" that DP's actually were subversive-minded. He described the screening process as complex, involving investigations by sponsoring organizations, military, immigration and civilian bodies and reported that the DP was "quizzed" fourteen times before reaching the U.S.

He said also that fewer than one per cent of the DP's are eliminated through screening because they consituted a threat to our security.

Conferees praised unanimously the progress that DP's had made toward becoming "full-fledged Americans". They noted that 110,000 had been admitted thus far under the act that is expiring June 30, 1950, and that the quota is 205,000. They hoped that legislation recommending a total of 339,000 would be passed. The total number of DP's was estimated at 500,000.

Fred W. Ramsey, president of Church World Service, explained that of this number some 150,000 probably could never be moved out of Germany because of age or illness.

Answering a question about the views of Senator Pat McCarran, Democrat, of Nevada, on DP legislation, Dr. Van Kirk said, "We hope to convince Mr. McCarran that perhaps there may be some error in his judgment".

The Senator, arriving in New York on December 7 from a trip to Europe, attacked the Displaced Persons Act as having failed to provide for this country's security. He was especially critical of "inadequate screening" of applicants.

Also taking part in the conference were Dr. Carl Lundquist, of the National Lutheran Council; the Rev. Aloysius J. Wycisło, assistant executive director of the war relief servi[illegible] Rabbi Bernard J. Bamb[illegible] of the Synagogue Council of America; and Arthur Greenleigh, associate director of United Service for New Americans.

Edward J. Shaughnessy, [illegible] or of the New York District of the United States Immigration [illegible] Congress to admit 137,000 additional displaced persons were adopted the problem of such persons as known in the country would be solved.

Mr. Shaughnessy addressed 1,600 delegates at the twentieth annual convention of the Council of Organizations of the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society in the Commodore Hotel.

"Canada's most progressive camp for young Jewish boys and girls"

Beautifully situated, in the heart of Ontario's woodland paradise on the Muskoka mainland, 3 hours drive from Toronto, Camp Ogama presents a truly rustic picture... its 300 acres partly hemmed by rippling lakes, embraces sandy beaches, backgrounded by fragrant spruces, cedars and pines.

There's not a camp anywhere that provides so completely for the comfort, health and safety of its young campers. Here boys and girls (6 to 16 years) enjoy participating sports and crafts, all expertly directed by trained counsellors to create initiative and self-reliance.

EDA UNVANQUISHED

By Adele M. Harvey, In The Menorah Journal

A huge crowd was at the pier when the Queen Mary docked yesterday, and I didn't see Eda until she threw her arms around my neck and cried, "Miss Pat, how very good of you to come to meet us."

I don't think I would have recognized her anyway. She was a new Eda, tiny as I remembered and as self-assured, but wonderfully elegant in Parisian garb. I took them all home to my apartment, Eda, her taciturn husband and the two children, the baby whom I had helped into this world more than two years ago and the little solemn-eyed eight-year-old girl whom I was seeing for the first time.

Supper was a gala affair; my mother had created another of her culinary masterpieces, wonderfully rich foods in the best American tradition; and the chatter was very gay and animated and light.

It was only after the children were in bed, Sandor working in my study, and my mother out to the movies, that Eda and I could get together to reminisce.

I don't quite remember the first time I saw Eda. It was sometime just before the Americans had come into northern Germany in 1945. Betty Jarvis and I were running a small aero-club at an air base near Kassel. After spending whole days in the kitchen around doughnut fat and boiling coffee, we were jubilant when the colonel told us we could get a dozen girls to help us from the recently liberated Auschwitz concentration camp. Betty went down to the Displaced Persons camp, where the Liberees were being lodged and returned with a truckload of women. She brought thirteen, one to help with our own quarters. That was Eda. It was like Eda to get into things or out of them in the nick of time.

I don't like to remember the condition of those girls. It was pitiable. Until the previous year, none of them had even heard of each other. Now, the tragedy of war and common religion had bound them inseparably. They were all Hungarian Jewesses who had been working as German slave labor for a year. They owned one dress apiece, torn up the back and marked with a large "J" between the shoulders and the waist. Their feet were bound in newspapers and rags, and their hair had been raggedly clipped. They were all big-boned and pathetically thin, all but Eda.

It was several weeks before I could tell one from another. Betty and I spent more time rehabilitating those girls than on our doughnuts. But they were worth it. We found an artist in our midst, several musicians, a medical student, a clothes designer and, best of all, thirteen cooks.

They used the same ingredients we had and the same recipe, but something wonderful happened to their doughnuts that we could never make happen to ours. We just held our breath and continued to scrounge for clothes, stockings, hair pins, underwear, cosmetics—anything we could possibly acquire by fair means or any way—and our thirteen staff members blossomed once more into thirteen individuals.

Eda was our special project. She took care of our quarters, our two dogs and our laundry. We saw the other girls at the club when we were on duty, but Eda was a symbol for our off-duty hours when we could throw off the constant cheerfulness and relax. She was a pathetic little thing; as Betty said, "a bag o' bones and a hank o' hair." She rarely spoke, but she went about her work with a staunch determination that swept all deterrents from her path. And slight as she was, her housekeeping was thorough and organized. I could almost set my watch by what Eda was doing around the apartment. Some of my keenest memories are of Eda wrapped in a gray Army coverall, on her knees, her thin childlike arms scrubbing away at the floor as if her very life depended on its cleanliness.

One afternoon I came into my room and startled Eda who was carefully scrutinizing my brother's picture on the dressing table.

"Handsome, isn't he?" I said.

She started. "Ya," she murmured, "he is good-looking man." And she went back to her dusting.

"He's in the American Army in the Pacific," I offered.

Eda looked as if it were an effort for her to speak. And indeed English was an unfamiliar language for her. (She told me later that she had studied it in school, but her first use of it was with Betty and me in Germany.)

"It is bad that you also are separated," she finally said.

"In war time one must expect that kind of thing." I was instantly sorry I had said that, for a shadow crossed her gaunt little face.

"Ya, Miss Pat, I know. I have been separated from my people more than a year."

"Do you have a large family?" I was probing.

"No, there is only my man and my child and the elders of my man."

"Oh, Eda, I didn't know you were married. And a child, my, is it a boy or a girl?" Eda's answer made me feel foolish for my enthusiasm.

"Daught-er . . . Perhaps she does not any longer live."

But the ice was broken, and after that Eda and I had many conversations. The story was a tragic one, but such an ordinary one in Europe then, that every third person you might stop on the street could tell a tale as harrowing and as heartrending. Eda was born in Hungary, and gay beautiful Budapest was her home until the advent of the Germans. Then she and her young husband fled to Czechoslovakia where his parents were living, where her child was born. Hitler's armies moved on, and her respite was short. Her husband, who did not have the taint of Jewish blood, was forced into the Hungarian Army, and Eda was pressed into Germany, the munitions factory and the concentration camp. Her lot there was a particularly bitter one, for she was smaller than the other women and the birth of the child, whom she had to leave with her grandparents, left her weak and tired. It was difficult for her to keep up with the quota of work, and the strain was torturous. But she held on.

Each week the women were examined and weeded out by a German doctor. Those who could continue working were sent back to the shell factory; the others passed through a door and were never again heard of. Eda knew nothing, not then, of the death ovens and gas chambers, but her instinct warned her that as long as she could maintain her place with the workers, she was safe. And so she dreaded those examinations more than any other depravities, more than the sadism of the guards, more than the hunger and the filth and the cold. She had to keep away from that door which opened only one way.

That determination kept her alive. She used all kinds of devices. She would force her puny body to do extra work to prove to the guards how valuable she was. She argued with the doctor, professed vitality—and she was lucky. She was allowed to live, to exist. But each day was another step towards freedom, towards the man and the child she must see again. She never lost hope.

The day came, however, when it was so clear that she could not go on working at the same rate as the other woman that the doctor roughly pushed her into the sick line, and for a moment Eda thought she was gone. But only for a moment; her luck held. The guards were busy and, tiny as she was, it was easy for her to slip back into her old place and so return to the factory. The next week when the surprised doctor would certainly have finished with her for good, it was too late, for the Allies had already entered Germany. The factory was moved, and the slave laborers were set on the roads and pressed south by the harassed and confused Germans.

That march was a singular hell. They walked on their paper-bound feet, bleeding, exhausted, starved. But there was positive hope for the first time in a year. They knew that succor was not too far off. And they were pleased by the hysteria of the guards who hounded them.

The rest happened quickly. The disheartened Germans, eager to save their own skins, disappeared into the villages and the woods, and the women were left stranded on the wide Autobahn near Frankfurt. They were rescued by British infantrymen and brought to Kassel where Betty claimed our thirteen because, she said, they looked in better condition than the others. Eda had been the last chosen. She had come up to Betty and begged to be taken, for the Red Cross was a symbol of salvation to her.

From then on her every action was directed towards one thing: to get back to Sandor and the little girl. The other girls settled down to a kind of day-by-day living. Their health was being rapidly restored, they had plenty of food, clothes, and a job. Their favorite topics of conversation were their homes, their lives before the war, and the great desire to return to Hungary. But they found time to flirt with the American troops, to pretty themselves, to fuss with their meager wardrobes. Not so Eda. Every day she wore the spotless gray uniform we had provided, and when her thin hair began to grow back she pinned it back of her ears and forgot about it. She did her work, read her little English grammar book and went to bed. And she made plans.

We moved our aero-club, and the girls persuaded us with many tears and much wringing of hands to take them to our new destination. It was highly irregular; but in those first days after the war nothing was regular, and the girls pleaded so effectively that Betty and I couldn't leave them behind. Eda told me, several months later, that it was she who had encouraged this idea with the girls. She had heard Betty and me speaking of our new base which would be in the south of Germany near the Czechoslovakian border. A whiff of home!

We were at Schwabach several months when Eda startled us by coming into the kitchen with a bundle over her shoulder, hobo-style. Her hair was tied in a peasant kerchief tightly knotted under her chin, but she still wore the gray cotton Red Cross work uniform.

"And where do you think you're going?" Betty asked.

"I go home," Eda smiled, but she was wary. "I go to Pilsen; Der Sergeant, he take me to Nurnberg, then I get truck, I go to Pilsen." She turned to the door.

The girls had stopped working and crowded around Eda. They started to question her in Hungarian. In less than a minute we had a kitchen of excited, hysterical females, jabbering and weeping and wringing their hands. They would all go home.

"Wait a minute," I said, "this is utterly ridiculous." My voice became shrill and the women calmed down. "We'll all get together and discuss this business of going home calmly. Meanwhile, Eda, you come to the office with me." I marched off with Eda following me, and felt like the teacher taking a naughty pupil to the principal. Betty stayed in the kitchen to nurse the fluttering females and the neglected doughnuts.

I hadn't been talking for two minutes when I realized it was to no avail. The little woman who had escaped the wiles of a concentration camp doctor could surely cope with a tired Red Cross girl. Eda stood and looked at me politely and said nothing. I explained what a long journey it would be. I talked about how slight were her chances of having enough food along the way, the peril of being stranded on a lonely road without transportation. I even fell to telling how hard it would be for her if she fell into Russian hands. For, after all, she was a Hungarian national—hence, an enemy of the Allies—and she had no papers to prove she was a displaced person. I had been working with the Military Government to have the girls declared displaced persons, which would entitle them to certain privileges not granted enemy nationals; but the official word had not as yet come through.

I pleaded with her to wait. She was taking such a big chance. Didn't she like it here? Weren't we kind to her? Was she working too hard?

Eda heard me out. When I paused, she opened her bundle. In it she had a dress and some underclothes we had provided for her and the others. In an old copy of the Stars and Stripes were a dozen crumpled doughnuts and a long loaf of Army white bread — a gift from the mess-sergeant—and neatly folded underneath it all was the ragged garment of the concentration camp. She explained that would be her passport through the Allied Armies. They would hardly harm a person who was such an enemy of the Germans. I could not keep her. There was only one thing to do, to help her.

"All right Eda, you can go. But you are not permitted to wear that uniform. You must wear civilian clothes."

Our girls loved those little gray coveralls with the Red Cross on the sleeve; they flaunted it in the face of the German civilians at every opportunity. They wanted to save it for their days off, and we could barely persuade them it was for kitchen duty only.

Eda's face fell. "I give it to Gyongi," she said. "she save it for me when I come back."

"Oh, so you're coming back, well, well; and I suppose you expect Miss Betty and me to keep your job for you."

"Ya, Miss Pat," she smiled engagingly. "I come back with my man and my girl. We work together in the soldier club. My man he is engineer; he fix the stove when it is kaput."

"O.K." I patted her on the head, "but I won't let you go without some more food and some money. We'll get some marks together and see if we can't find you a better ride into Nurnberg and on the road to Pilsen."

Betty and I "snowed" the mess-sergeant into opening his larder to us, and we wrapped some canned milk, coffee, sugar and dried cereal with the doughnuts and bread. We added our P. X. candy rations; and half a dozen G. I.'s in the club who were fascinated by the preparations contributed a hundred German marks. We armed Eda with a note saying the groceries were honestly acquired in case an M. P. patrol stopped her, and once more she said farewell to her excitable, vociferous comrades. I explained that Eda was going on a short vacation to Czechoslovakia and, when she returned, I would see about vacations for all of them.

Betty and I had become fond of our brood, and we worried about what would happen to them if they left us. They didn't realize that if they did manage to get back to Hungary, they would not find their homes in the same condition they had left them. And, we wanted them to wait until the relief organizations were well under way, and they could be repatriated properly when policy had been set. In later months I encountered many displaced persons, but never a group like this with whom the feeling for "home" was so strong.

I drove Eda twenty miles to Nurnberg in my little Opel and placed her with a group of refugees waiting for a German lorry, on the road to Pilsen. Her cheeks were flushed when she said goodbye to me, and I could feel her excitement. She held her head high, and somehow she didn't look nearly as tiny as usual.

"Well, that's the last I'll see of that gal," I thought, sighing as I drove away.

The summer was nearly over by the time we had our new aero-club really completed in Schwabach. Our staff had blossomed into a group of fascinating individuals.

"It takes a great deal to kill a human being," one of them said to me one day. "Give someone hope and a future, and the present is bearable."

Betty had managed to acquire a sewing machine for them, and they turned out elaborate costumes. Hedwig painted murals in the lounge and Alice was giving concerts for the soldiers. We had a lively household and a talented staff. And Betty and I would have been entirely smug had not the eternal question of "going home" come up more and more frequently. We placed investigation forms in Frankfurt with UNRRA for their families but that was only temporary balm. They felt that once they saw their beloved Budapest again, they could take up life where they had left it and no amount of logical arguing on our part could convince them otherwise.

And then Eda returned. It was early in October and the wind was already biting sharp. Eda just walked into my office and stood before me. I gasped.

"Eda, where on earth did you come from?"

"I come back." She smiled. Her hair was tightly bound in the old cotton kerchief, and her nose was frostbitten and red. But her black eyes gleamed with contentment and satisfaction.

"So I see, so I see." I had come around the desk and put my hands on her shoulders. "Well, well, so miracles do happen, how are you Eda?"

She didn't answer my question. "Miss Pat, I have job still, nicht?"

"Yes, I suppose so..."

"And my man, he is engineer; he has job too, nicht?"

"Your what?"

"My Sandor . . . he is here with me . . . see I call him." She opened the door and spoke in German. "Sandor, it is all well now, come."

She took the hand of the tall, slender man who came through the doorway. "This is my Sandor Forbath." She was beaming.

"I'm very glad to meet you, Mr. Forbath." We shook hands formally. "Eda tells me you are an engineer."

"He speaks not English. Only German, Czechish and Hungarish," said Eda. "I speak for him."

Mr. Forbath was not at ease. He stood twisting his rough cap in his long knobby fingers. His face was unsmiling and severe. Yet, there was a fine sensitiveness in the full mouth and the eyes were deep blue and pained. Mr. Forbath had not had an easy time.

"O. K., Eda, you win again. I'll talk to the Personnel Officer about giving your husband a job here at the club, but you will have to find a room for him in town."

"Oh, thank you, Miss Pat, thank you, thank you," she wrung my hand. "Now we get married."

"You what! Listen here, Eda, I thought this man was your husband. What do you mean married?" Eda's beaming face sobered. "Miss Pat," she said seriously, "in the old Germany, a Jew could not marry. Sandor and I wished to marry, but it was verboten. And there is the child. . . ."

I had forgotten about the child and I hesitated about asking now, but Eda went on after a brief pause.

"She is with her grandparents who care for her. After . . . when I have money and my new child . ." She pressed her stomach. " I go back and get her too."

So we had a wedding. There were twelve weeping bridesmaids and a thousand guests. Every G. I. who could get into the chapel was there. We found a chaplain in a nearby Infantry Division who could speak German and he performed a long complicated ceremony. The bride came down the aisle clinging to both Betty and me, a slight deviation from custom, but Eda could not decide who would give her away, and she did not want to slight either of her fine American ladies. It was a festive occasion. I have never been to a more brilliant wedding. The girls were decked out in their most elaborate garb, and Betty and I beamed on our family with satisfaction. During the ceremony Betty caught my eye, and I knew she was thinking, as I was, of the marvelous healing powers of time . . . a short six months to bring these women back to life. I wondered how many others had been so fortunate.

The chapel was filled with autumn leaves, and the bride was so happy, she infected the company with her gay spirit. Even the grim Sandor had cast aside his solemnity and looked pleasantly at his wife and the aggregation of the American Army.

We didn't ask where the girls acquired the food for the feast that followed the ceremony. But we had our suspicions. Hedwig and the mess officer were keeping rather steady company. There was chicken paprikosh, and long white bread, soft and doughy, and Apfel Kuchen, and Strudel pastries, and (courtesy of the American Red Cross) doughnuts. We ate and ate, and the girls sang songs, plaintive Hungarian melodies and gay dancing tunes, and they danced and laughed and swung their brilliant skirts.

And there was a barrel of beer and bottles of Rhinewine; more than one G. I. rolled into the club the next morning begging for black coffee to ease his aching head.

I don't know what Eda said to the other girls, but she did talk to them, and after the wedding the talk about going home lessened considerably. Eda and Sandor worked for us for several months after that. Then, Sandor was discovered. Good engineers were needed on the base, and we relinquished him to the Army. And one day in March Eda didn't come to work. She sent word by Sandor that she was not feeling very well. The girls in the kitchen looked at one another, made mental calculations and I had twelve self-appointed midwives pleading for permission to go to their friend.

"No," I said firmly, "I'll go."

I picked up the field phone and rang the base hospital.

"Hank," I said to the sergeant in charge, "what do you know about babies?"

"Blondes or brunettes?" asked Hank.

"No, you dope . . . new-born babies, having them."

"We-ell, Pat," he drawled, "I could tell you some mighty interesting things on that subject. How about a date?"

"Listen, you baboon, I'm not playing games. Eda is having her baby, probably right this very minute. And I wouldn't be at all surprised if she could use some help. How about it?"

"Wow . . . Eda. Sure I'll help. Be right there."

I wanted a man around. Our base doctor was expressly forbidden to accept civilian patients, and Eda would not have a German physician. Hank was the next best thing. He was stalwart and reliable, and before the afternoon was over I was sure it had been a brilliant stroke to ask him.

We found Eda in bed in the little room where she and Sandor were living in the town. She was in an old cotton nightgown, and the skinny plaits of her hair hung over her shoulders like so much string. She was holding tightly to a rolled up copy of a fashion magazine I had given her months before.

She looked up when we came in and grinned. "I have baby today, I think." Her face contorted. "Now, I think."

Hank and I helped, but of the three of us Eda was the most competent, and the best informed. She lay there clutching the headposts of the bed, and gave instructions which Hank and I followed. It was almost midnight when we placed the tiny male child in the bed with Eda, and I called in Sandor from the hall. I did not have to understand the Hungarian words he spoke to her. They were a universal language.

Several weeks after that I was transferred to another unit. At first Betty kept me informed about the girls. Alice had joined an orchestra and was doing well travelling around and playing for the American troops. Hedwig and the mess officer were planning to be married; Marianna discovered a lost uncle in Nurnberg. And then I started to get letters from Eda. When I returned to the United States, Eda and Sandor with the two children were on their way to southern France where Sandor was going to work on the rebuilding. I was not surprised, for I knew Eda, and there was little beyond her firm will and determination.

From Cannes the letters came regularly and were more and more cheerful. Then they stopped. I wondered for a while, but I was busy becoming readjusted to my old life, and I didn't miss them nearly as much as I once would have.

Then there was the cablegram from Paris. Eda and the family were coming to America. Sandor was coming on business—something to do with the reconstruction. He would be in the United States all summer conferring with American engineers. Could I meet them at the boat? Could I?

I looked at the woman in the chair opposite me. Her eyes were bright as they once had been. No finger wave or elegant garb could squelch the vigor and buoyancy of that dynamic person any more than German bestiality could squelch her determination to live.

"Come into the bedroom, Miss Pat," she said, rising, "and see my new frocks."

We walked softly into the bedroom, arms entwined. Eda covered the sleeping children, touched their foreheads, and then turned to the large bag in the corner of the room. She opened it. On the very top, neatly pressed, was the old cotton dress, with a tear up the back and a large "J" inscribed between the shoulders and the waist.

Patriarch Was 106 If Not Really 130

Max Greenbaum, for a number of years patriarch of the Brooklyn Hebrew Home and Hospital for the Aged, Howard and Dumont Avenue, died at the home.

Mr. Greenbaum's title of patriarch, awarded to the oldest of the institution's 650-member family, was temporarily wrested from him in November, 1948, when Joseph Popick entered the home at the age of 108. It was reported that Mr. Greenbaum asserted he was 130 when he heard of the new arrival's age and right to the title, but he relinquished his claim a month later, when Mr. Popick died. Mr. Greenbaum was an ardent smoker; Mr. Popick abstained.

Mr. Greenbaum was born in Warsaw in 1843, Warsaw was then under Russian rule, and when Mr. Greenbaum, who had served a long period in the Czar's army, was faced with a second conscription he decided to leave for the United States. In 1870 he disguised himself in women's clothes and fled across the border with his wife, Sarah.

They arrived in New York the same year and friends set him up in a tailor shop, where he worked for many years. His wife died in 1921 and seven years later he entered the home. He was then eighty-five. Though confined to a wheel chair for the last couple of years, Mr. Greenbaum got around regularly to services and concerts at the home. His eyesight was good and he never had to use glasses.

Last September he took part in a Jewish New Year service at the home.

Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Mollie Engel and Mrs. Ray Appleby; four sons, Joseph, Meyer, Jacob and Abraham Greenbaum; eleven grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

When buying apple juice, housewives should look for the label "vitaminized", which means the apple juice has been fortified with vitamin C. This is the vitamin commonly found in oranges and grapefruit. For variety, then, you can serve "vitaminized" apple juice instead of orange juice for breakfast.

And took from us a shining light.

As a person grows older he usually becomes less active and has less need for energy foods. But he still needs the same amounts of foods containing vitamins, minerals, and proteins. The elderly person needs foods that are easily digested and some senior citizens get along better on smaller meals with mid-morning and mid-afternoon snacks. Good feeding does not happen by chance. Make sure your family is getting the proper foods for health.

Commentaries

By Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi

If I Were A Christian

What would I do if I were a Christian? First of all, I would make every effort to follow the teachings of that Jewish moralist, Jesus, whom Christians regard as the very foundation and inspiration of Christianity. Above all else, Jesus taught love of mankind—love even of one's enemies. Above all else, Christians have put forth the claim that Christianity is primarily a religion of love. They base this claim upon the following sublime utterance of Jesus: "Love your enemies, them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be children of your Father which is in heaven." Now the early Judaeo-Christian communities practiced this law of love. But soon, when Christianity became institutionalized, this great ideal became lost in the jungle of ecclesiasticism and dogmatism.

If I were a Christian, in the second place I would find pride in the institution of the Church. I must remember, and I want my neighbor never to forget, that it was the church that wedded art to religion; that it was she who employed the scholars and copyists of the ages to preserve the literature of antiquity; that for ages she was the patron of knowledge, and that she has excelled in the field of charity, the allaying of the evils of society and the dispensing of hope to the discouraged. But, at the same time, I should grieve at the attitude of the church toward truth-seekers, scientists, and non-Christians. I should especially bemoan the un-Christlike attitude of the Churchianity toward the Jew.

If I were a Christian, I would try to understand the Jew. I would cast aside prejudice. I would try to comprehend the religious ideals of the Jew, not only as they are contained in Scripture but as they have developed during the last twenty centuries.

If I were a Christian, I would especially make every effort to learn to understand the Jew's attitude to Jesus, and after due study I would come to realize that it is not spiritual blindness or stubbornness that prevents him from accepting Jesus as divine. I would come to know that Jews never deified personality; that Jews ever worshipped the ideal, the idea, the moral law. Moses, the greatest prophet in Jewish tradition, is only a mere human being, insignificant in the presence of the Supreme Infinite. That is the very reason why the synagogue never carved on its walls the images of its great personalities. That is the very reason why even an Einstein, a Jew, the greatest mind of our age, could never be pictured on the portals of a Jewish Temple.

If I were a Christian, I would guard my daily conduct. I would want the Jew to comprehend the value of Christianity by my actions toward him. I would be brotherly toward him in business and in the social world. I would not refuse him employment because he is a Jew. I would judge him on his personal human merits. In my social service club I would not fear to elect him to office.

If I were a Christian, I would be a man universal. I would not hold aloof from any group of people or any class of men. I would throw my efforts toward the promotion of the social forces of religion. I would work in the cause of humanity. For true religion concerns itself with human-kind, "Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us?"

SPORTSMANSHIP IN "CANADA UNLIMITED"

Skating moves indoors!

Gala ice revues, big-league stadium games . . . started on a January day nearly a century ago!

The Canadian Amateur Figure Skating Championships for 1950 will be held at St. Catharines, Ont., Feb. 7th, 8th and 9th.

It was a big day for the Halifax of 1863. The Earl of Mulgrave, Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, was to open the new indoor skating rink . . . the first in Canada's history.

At the Public Gardens, spectators thronged into the building. As the arena was declared officially open a band struck up. Onto the ice streamed 60 costumed ladies to give an exhibition of fancy skating. Canadian indoor skating had been born. And 44 years later—in 1907—the Toronto Skating Club pioneered ice revues with their first Skating Carnival.

Sportsmanship has always meant much to Canadians. Combined with teamwork, it has made us one of the world's great nations. Together, sportsmanship and teamwork keep your opportunities for work and play in Canada . . . unlimited.

"I have been told by those who should be in a position to know," Mr. Shaughnessy said, "that if the DP law is passed and is extended for an additional year from July 1, 1950, visas covering the whole authorized group of displaced persons should be issued by the end of December of next year, thus closing up the major portion of the work of the DP problem as this country knows it".

Mr. Shaughnessy added, however, that the law would not solve the problem of the "the hard core". This, he explained, was a group of 160,000 persons who for one reason or another could not meet the requirements of the immigration laws.

"Contrary to the thought of many that the Jewish people have monopolized the numbers available under the DP Act," Mr. Shaughnessy said, "my latest figures show that of 122,120 visas issued to displaced persons, approximately 41 per cent were issued to Catholics, 31 percent to Protestants and 26 percent to the Jewish people. The other one per cent is given to unclassified groups."

The director recently returned from a trip to Europe. He traveled with a group of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives studying the DP situation.

Samuel A. Telsey, resident of HIAS, declared that the difference between it and other organizations interested in immigration was that HIAS was "not supported by the rich who live in comfort".

"HIAS is supported by the great Jewish masses," Mr. Telsey said. "We are of the masses and look to the masses for our support, not only in money but also in moral and spiritual influences".

Louis Gallack, chairman of the HIAS Council of Organizations, reported that in the first nine months of 1949 the society assisted 17,000 Jews to emigrate and settle in new homelands.

"Operation Murder" was prepared by Anatole Goldstein and edited by Maximilian Hurwitz, both of the Institute staff. It was compiled from official sources and from the archives of the Institute of Jewish Affairs.

The Institute was set up by the World Jewish Congress in 1941 to collect records of Nazi crimes preceding and during World War II. After the war ended the Institute made its archives and services available to those charged with the prosecution of the Nazi war criminals. The Institute was commended for its services by Justice Robert H. Jackson, Chief U.S. Prosecuter at the trial of Goering, and the other top Nazis at Nuremburg. In his preface to "Operation Murder", Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, Director of the Institute of Jewish Affairs, declared:

"The purpose of this series is not to rehearse atrocities. Rather it is to remind the world and the Germans themselves of something which cannot and should not be forgotten. As Odd Nansen rightly remarks in the Postscript to his book From Day To Day, 'the worst crime you can commit today against yourself and society is to forget what happened and sink back into indifference. What happened is worse than you have any idea of. And it was the indifference of mankind that let it take place'."

"I deeply regret that the United Nations has adopted a policy in respect of Jerusalem which I think is unjust and unworkable," he said. "Its results may well be tragic to both Israel and the United Nations."

"It is a source of satisfaction to me to know that our own beloved country of America did everything within its power to prevent this unfortunate action by the United pray that through the force of pub- Nations", he said. "I hope and lic opinion a way may yet be found to correct the grievous mistake which has been made".

He warned that if "the coming of a Jewish nationality in Palestine is to give to Jewish groups throughout the world the character of national groups," it would aggravate the problem of anti-Semitism, says the New York Times. Defending Britain against charges of being anti-Semitic, he declared that England had brought more Jews into Palestine in twenty-five years than had gone there in the previous 2,000 years.

CITES SALE OF ARMS TO ARABS

An American occupation of Germany for ten more years was advocated by Representative Jacob K. Javits, Republican, of New York, upon his return to Washington from an investigation of the German situation as a member of a House foreign affairs subcommittee. He said this was his personal conviction as the time needed to "straighten out" Germany.

On the question of rearming Western Germany, even under the direction of the United States, Great Britain and France, Representative Javits said the other three members of the subcommittee agreed this step should not be undertaken. They are Democratic Representatives Joseph L. Pfeifer, of New York, chairman; Thomas S. Gordon, of Illinois, and Clement J. Zablocki, of Wisconsin.

Speaking again for himself only, Mr. Javits asserted that the 1947 arms embargo on sale of arms to Israel should be re-examined, because of what he contended was the continued British sale of arms to Egypt, Iraq and Hashemite Jordan.

"I do not believe we can shut our eyes to British sales of arms in Egypt, Iraq and Jordan," Mr. Javits said, "particularly when Arab leaders are talking of a second round of warfare." Israel, he added, fears "a new Arab war" and finds justification for those fears in the current talk of Arab leaders.
